Course description
Prerequisite: Graduate or professional standing; All face-to-face instruction; Credit hours earned by traditional Carnegie definition; This course will cover feminist approaches to methods in the social sciences, humanities, and health sciences, such as ethnography, interviews, statistics, focus groups, surveys, archival research, discourse analysis, and visual analysis. We will use transdisciplinary perspectives to consider work from a range of academic fields and topics in order to critique issues of epistemology, methodology, methods, interpretation, and writing.

Course objectives:
After taking this course, you should be able to:
- Describe feminist conversations about epistemology (the study of knowledge – what it is, how we know) and methodologies (how we go about producing new knowledges) and the relationship between them.
- Identify historical and contemporary debates and tensions in conceptualizing, conducting, analyzing, and disseminating feminist research.
- Analyze research methods strategies and techniques through a feminist lens.
- Apply feminist methodologies to your own research projects and interests.
TEACHING APPROACH

There are a number of things about my approach to teaching and learning that you should know in order to have the best possible experience in this course. I use an engaged approach to teaching and learning that is interactive, emphasizes mutual participation and responsibility, and values each individual’s contribution to the learning process. What this means is that the course expects you to be an active learner, relate what you learn to your own research interests, and engage in dialogue with both the instructor and other students on the topics we cover. As a graduate seminar, the quality of our sessions is very much dependent on your level of engagement. In other words, be accountable to yourselves and others so that we can all have a productive, enjoyable learning experience.

We may discuss some controversial issues in this course, and it is important to respect other people and “agree to disagree.” While all points of view are respected in my classroom, derogatory or hateful language and statements are never permitted, so that the classroom can be the safest space possible for everyone to learn. Likewise, I aim to cultivate mutual respect and care for each other, especially when we disagree.

READINGS

There are three books to purchase, available at A Room of One’s Own, 315 W. Gorham St.:

All other readings are available as PDF downloads on our Canvas course website: https://canvas.wisc.edu/

You should complete the readings by the date listed on the calendar below. This should go without saying, but is worth repeating that reading is not optional. Please come to class prepared to discuss the readings. Preparing for class will definitely help your participation grade. If you have questions about how to best approach your task of reading and note-taking in order to prepare for class, please come talk to me.

ASSIGNMENTS

- All assignments must be submitted via Canvas at 11:59pm on the day they are due.
- If you are absent on the day a paper is due, you are still responsible for submitting the assignment on Canvas.
- Late assignments are penalized 10% of the grade for each day they are late; no assignments are accepted more than one week after the due date.
- All papers must use Times New Roman font, 12 point, double-spaced, 1-inch margins, with all references cited using Chicago or APA citation style. PRO TIP: The reading calendar below is in Chicago style!!
- This is a writing intensive course, and I encourage you to take advantage of the Writing Center!! https://writing.wisc.edu/index.html

<tr>
<td>In the spirit of engaged pedagogy and a participatory graduate seminar, you will take turns co-facilitating the first portion of class on selected weeks. You are responsible for 1. Summarizing the key point(s) of the readings, 2. Making connections between the week’s readings and other course concepts and theories, 3. Proposing a few discussion questions, and 4. Distributing to the class a 1-2 page document that contains the above items. You will upload this document to Canvas the night before class and I will print hard copies to bring to class.</td>

<td>Part of being a good scholar is keeping up with the research that’s being published in your field(s). Fortunately, the internet makes this super easy. For this assignment, you will set up email alerts to 7-10 journals that publish research related to your interests. Generally, you have to make an account with the publisher (e.g.: Sage, Duke) and then you can sign up for table of contents alerts for their journals. Your choices can be from any number of publishers or fields. For the assignment, you will simply make a list of the journals you subscribed to and post it on Canvas. This list must be hyperlinked to the journal’s main webpage (use the chainlink icon). We will also have a class discussion about the journals and consider them in the context of feminist research.</td>

<th>Methods memos</th>
<th>(10 points each)</th>
<th>DUE 2/12, 3/12, and 4/23</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Because we cannot possibly cover all research methods in this course, you will complete a series of “methods memos” in which you seek out additional information about research methods that interest you. Note that these memos should be focused on methods (the specific strategies used to produce knowledge), rather than methodology (a particular theory and analysis of how research does or should proceed), although of course, the distinction can be quite slippery. The goal of the memos is to help you build practical knowledge and skills in conducting research with a feminist lens. You may choose methods we have covered in class, but you do not have to.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

I’ve created a list of methods books from which you can refer to find additional readings about your chosen methods. Each memo will be no longer than 3 pages and structured according to the following:

- Briefly summarizes the method and locates it in its disciplinary home(s)/intellectual traditions
• Provides information on how researchers use the method (e.g.: interviews may be structured or semi-structured; they are done one-on-one or groups; transcribed verbatim, etc. etc.)
• Discusses how one might employ a feminist epistemology and methodology to the method
• Identifies and critiques a journal article that uses the method

Final paper Brief proposal DUE 4/2, Paper DUE 5/7

The final paper in this course will be tailored to your learning needs and where you are at in your academic program. You will submit a brief proposal (no more than 1 page outlining your idea). Failure to submit the brief proposal will result in a 10% reduction on your final paper grade!! First year MA students and those new to research methods will complete a research proposal for their thesis project. Even if you are not required to submit a formal proposal in your program, trust that writing one will put you at a great advantage in actually carrying out your project. More advanced students may choose to apply a feminist methodology to a dissertation chapter or journal article. The length of your final paper will be commensurate to its purpose (i.e., the journal you’re submitting it to, a typical dissertation chapter length in your field). MA student thesis proposals will be approximately 15 pages.

On the last day of class (4/30) we will have an informal peer workshop in which you will provide feedback on each other’s final paper drafts. We will decide collectively when to circulate the works in progress.

CLASS POLICIES

Communicating with me

Please allow 24-48 for an email response. If it’s been longer than that, a polite reminder is OK. I generally do not answer email past 6pm on weekdays and not at all on weekends. This should go without saying but I do it anyways: Emailing an instructor is not the same as texting a friend. I expect you to write professional emails to me. This includes an informative subject line (not just “question” or “GWS 900,” addressing the email to me, signing your name, and being polite even if you are upset.

I encourage you to visit my office hours if you need help or just want to chat. If you want to discuss a grade, you must come to office hours; I do not discuss grades over email or before and after class.

Practicing Techno-mindfulness

Many professors at UW and elsewhere prohibit students from using laptops in the classroom. I do allow laptops/tablets in the classroom, as I recognize them as tools that can help you learn. You are welcome to use your computer in class in order to take notes or view the readings. You are not allowed to use technology in the classroom to absentmindedly surf the web, check email, or use social media. In other words, be present to the class and do not engage in multi-tasking. It is up to you to assess your ability to use your computer in the classroom and be mindful about it.

This policy is open to revision at any time during the semester. Please be mindful that if one person abuses the policy, it affects all of us. Cell phone use is not allowed in the classroom for any reason, except for sincere emergencies.

If you are caught surfing the web or checking your phone, you will be marked absent for that day, no exceptions.

- C 70-77
- D 60-69
- F below 60

ACADEMIC HONESTY POLICY

By enrolling in this course, each student assumes the responsibilities of an active participant in UW-Madison’s community of scholars in which everyone’s academic work and behavior are held to the highest academic integrity standards. Academic misconduct compromises the integrity of the university. Cheating, fabrication, plagiarism, unauthorized collaboration, and helping others commit these acts are examples of academic misconduct, which can result in disciplinary action. This includes but is not limited to failure on the assignment/course, disciplinary probation, or suspension. Substantial or repeated cases of misconduct will be forwarded to the Office of Student Conduct & Community Standards for additional review. For more information, refer to studentconduct.wiscweb.wisc.edu/academic-integrity/.

It is important to understand that academic dishonesty is not only harmful to yourself; it is also harmful to your peers and colleagues at UW as we come together as a community of learners. While there is a zero-tolerance policy of academic dishonesty in this course, we will work together to clear up misunderstandings about appropriate use of sources, appropriate citation and documentation, and the uses of intellectual property.
ACCOMODATION POLICY

I am committed to making sure my courses are accessible to students with a range of disability accommodations and learning needs. If you have a McBurney McBurney Faculty Notification Letter (VISA), please check in with me to make sure I’ve received it within the first 2 weeks of class. If you do not have a McBurney Faculty Notification Letter (VISA) but there are conditions or life circumstances that interfere with your ability to fulfill your responsibilities for this course, I encourage you to meet with me ASAP to discuss how best to accommodate you. In some cases, I may recommend that you consult with the McBurney Disability Resource Center: https://mcburney.wisc.edu/.

COURSE CALENDAR

Please note: This syllabus is a “living document” in the sense that course readings and assignments may change according to the needs of student learning.

The reading load in this course has been kept intentionally manageable and is lighter than comparable graduate courses. I expect you to come to class having read ALL of the readings, taken notes/journaled about them, and prepared to engage in discussion/questioning/critique.
