Seeking French-Speaking Student Hourly

The Study
The Contraceptive Autonomy Study is a mixed-methods research study led by Dr. Leigh Senderowicz, Health Disparities Research Scholar in the Department of Ob/Gyn. Funded by the UW Prevention Research Center, this study uses qualitative methods (in-depth interviews and focus group discussions) to generate a nuanced understanding of contraceptive coercion and autonomy among women of reproductive age living in a Global South setting.

The Role
This hire will be responsible for working with the PI on qualitative coding and analysis of interview transcripts written in French. Due to COVID-19, all work will be remote for the time being, with the possibility of in-person working meetings if/when safety conditions allow. The PI is committed both to research excellence and mentorship, and there will be plenty of opportunities for students to carve off a portion of this project for themselves or otherwise lead a paper to publication with authorship if desired. Hourly pay varies by student status, and number of hours per week will be determined during the hiring process.

Qualifications
Required
- Experience with qualitative coding and data analysis
- Excellent French reading and writing skills
- Ability to keep up with self-directed remote work (without constant oversight)
- Terrific organizational skills, including attention to detail and punctuality
- Sufficient time to devote to this research over the course of several months
- Strong written communication skills
- Ability to work both independently and collaboratively

Preferred
- Experience using NVivo software
- Knowledge of West African French dialect(s)
- Experience living/working in Francophone West Africa
- Knowledge of sexual and reproductive health

To apply
Please send an email to Dr. Leigh Senderowicz at senderowicz@wisc.edu including your résumé and a short description of how your profile matches the needs of this project.

Applications will be accepted until a hire has been made, but priority will be given to those received by 11/20/2020.
